MODULE 6 | WORKSHEET 1
HACCP tools: flow charts and decision trees
RISK
Flow charts are simple diagrams that map out a process so that it can easily be analysed and communicated to other people.
Flow charts are simple to use as they are made up of rectangles or squares, with what they represent written inside them, connective lines and directional arrows, showing the relationship between working phases and process flow.
To draw a flow chart, brainstorm the tasks and decisions made during a process, writing them down in order. Then map these out in flow chart format, remembering to include actions and decisions to be made. Finally, challenge the flow chart to make sure that it is an accurate representation and the most appropriate and efficient way of executing the process.

handwired enhancing spoonful bliss crunch replicate tremendous palatable taste receptors proprietary irresistible vanished
There's science behind that ...crunch.....
The food industry is even researching the connection between ..... on your tongue and the corresponding chemical reaction in your brain.
Here is the process for .....cheese flavor without the cheese.
If they can ..... that chemical reaction that may happen on your tongue or an aroma, they can simulate the taste of something without it being at all real.
The food industry is extremely secretive, competitive and .....
When they hit the perfect amounts, they call it "the ..... point" for sugar, "the mouth fill" for fat, "the flavor burst" for salt, - they know that their products will be .....
Scientists agree that these highly ..... foods can be addictive.
It becomes ..... and it's very hard to overcome.
Just one ..... lights up the happy zones of the brain in clinical trials.
And what happens is then that your brain gets fooled into thinking that calories have .....
The ..... amounts of money stand behind creating tastes and smells that feel real but in reality are completely artificial.
