Cleaning and disinfection techniques for laboratory materials

To understand the subject a little, first we must know a little more, how the difference between disinfection and cleaning. From this I will be able to tell you a little more, such as the different methods, which depend on the degree of dirt that is present in the laboratory material.

Cleaning is the procedure in which dirt is removed in the most effective way possible, where water is one of the main elements, of course there is also a neutral soap and distilled water.

Disinfection, this process is carried out after cleaning, and can only be done if the cleaning is very well done. It consists in eliminating microorganisms that are pathogenic or non-pathogenic.

To start with the washing procedure, the type of dirt must first be categorized, if the dirt is the usual one, it can be cleaned in this way, first the material must be taken and let water fall until it is completely wet, then apply neutral soap and rub it with a brush, special depending on the material, then the soap is removed with the water to finish all the material is covered with distilled water three times, if the material has a bottom, the distilled water is left and then stirred and Empty the container, to dry it by means of equipment or leave it to dry in the room with a wringer. When using a soap brush, you must first take into account whether the material is graded or not as this will affect its accuracy.

When disinfecting, the dry material is taken, then the disinfectant is taken and spread over the material, it should not exceed and let it act for, normally this is effective in a short time.

There are also different cleaning methods, this is by means of diluted acids or substances, to remove dirt that cannot be done with basic washing.

For me it was very fun to handle laboratory materials, but before that I had to clean them, I took a pipette, I think I was a volumetric one, a burette and a precipitated glass. Then I proceeded to wash them, I covered them with water for soap heracles, then with the help of a brush I rubbed them, so I removed the soap with the jet of water, to finish distilled water.

Topic: Physical Culture
This was a class we saw in the first trimester of the technician. What we did was talk about issues related to the physical state of a person, such as a healthy diet, in terms of portion and Classification of each meal, such as proteins, fruits and vegetables, flours, cereals, etc.
We also created our own daily exercise routine, where it contained a work of each part of our body, such as back and back, legs, abdomen, among others, in such a way that day by day we could work a different part of the body, letting the rest part that we worked the day before.

Example
Using "do" as a main verb looks like this:
Correct You can do it.
In the sentence above, "can" is a modal auxiliary and "do" is the main verb.
But you should not use "do" as an auxiliary when there is another modal auxiliary present.
Incorrect I can speak English.
Correct I can speak English.
Or
Correct I do speak English.
• Can (expresses ability or possibility)

Linear or continuous flow production

We come to the type of system that refers to the largest scale of production: continuous flow. Unlike mass production, in this system manufacturing is maintained 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Because production is constantly and repetitively maintained, the chances of eliminating costs and leveraging resources are greater. Additionally, inventory levels are minimal because the demand for products is constant.

In fact, among the types of production system, this is the one that can be automated the most, depending on the type of product.

What does a quality management system look for?
✦ Customer satisfaction: the purpose of implementing a quality management system is to meet customer expectations. The whole process is geared towards him.
✦ Obtaining new customers: compliance with the standards that a quality management system determines, gives security to potential customers. The acquisition of new clients is due to the good image that the fact that a company offers quality goods or services projects, and this happens by adopting a quality management system that supports both the procedure carried out and the result of the productive process. By having the certification in the ISO 9001 standard, excellent customer service is ensured that helps their recruitment.
✦ Improvement in the organization of the company's processes: the processes that are carried out in the productive activity follow standards that ensure that the standards that make it an optimized process are being met.
