Dennis Fralley
Computer Engineer
After I graduated as a computer engineer fifteen years ago, I became a computer teacher a school. I loved teaching, and I still enjoy doing a few hours a week, but I found that most of t really interesting work was in industry. I accepted a permanent job in the computer industry s years later. There I saw that real problems are not in laboratories but in the places whe products are made. So I moved into building computers and computers programs. Three yea later, I was an expert. I continue to teach but in a different way, taking real life into the classroom.
I work about ten hours a day. I enjoy what I do so I don´t have a problem with doing some work a home. I start by checking my e-mail before breakfast, do some work on the computer and then g to the office. My days are very busy – I read a lot and talk to many people. I consider that listening to others is very important. In fact, many of my ideas come to my mind when I´m doing that.
When I´m not working, I like listening to jazz and doing activities like writing this description o myself. I also find that teaching and math problems are very good for keeping my mind going.
